

I-Team European programme of cultural and social innovation

6 weeks across Europe
for in-depth rethinking of his personal and professional practice

I-Team is an annual learning programme open to French and other European practitioners who wish to engage with a process of cultural and social transformation.

I-Team sits within a context of major tensions in European societies. It paves the way for a clearer understanding of Europe's cultural and social challenges.

I-Team contributes to an enrichment of professional practices, by bringing them face to face with a wide range of European practitioners and realities.

The I-TEAM programme is:

- an active programme based on a commitment to individual and group working
- a programme of European involvement, featuring on the ground experience
- a programme open to a wide range of public and independent practitioners
- a programme of self-challenge, to find other ways of working, other economic models, other modes of collaboration
- a programme that connects with the cultural, social and political realities and questions of Europe
- a programme that has been co-devised with a range of European practitioners who have worked with Relais Culture Europe for a number of years on these questions of change
- a community of practitioners who have undertaken the programme since its inception, and who meet regularly to continue this exploration and work together.

The I-TEAM Programme: what new competencies does it enhance?

The I-Team programme should allow each member to increase their competencies in European innovation, in particular:

- a capacity for European analysis (economic, social, political, cultural etc.) in a globalising environment
- a capacity for innovation and a strategic approach in a changing context (thinking ahead, planning, making choices, etc.)
- a capacity for economic analysis on a broader level (value, creation of value, adding value)
- a capacity to consider and understand European and global contexts and their directions
- an understanding of European public tools that could impact on this evolution
- a capacity to devise new ways of working and developing innovative cultural products or services that offer considerable added social and economic value for Europe
- a capacity to adapt and act in contexts that are new, intercultural and changing
- a capacity to call on different competencies and disciplines in European working communities

It should also enable every participant :

- to think as a European in today's world
- to gain a clearer picture of what they would, as socially responsible cultural and creative practitioners, like to change
- to implement, through their practice, particular approaches towards commonly known changes
- to take individual and collective charge, and find an economy for future development of their work
